THE GREEN HORNET ON THE AIR

To the Strains of The Flight of the Bumblebee, Britt Reid, young publisher (and great-nephew of the Lone Ranger) matched wits with the underworld so that criminals and racketeers within the law would feel the sting of the Green Hornet. That great detective was the product of George Washington Trendle and his staff at station WXYZ, Detroit. Although conceived in 1935, ideas for the show went through a long period of testing and discussion among the staff which included Trendle's legal partner Raymond Meurer, station salesman Allen Campbell, head writer Fran Striker, dramatic director James Jewell, and the [then] chief of studios and production Brace Beemer. The program finally premiered on January 31, 1936 [although Trendle's biographer cites both this and Jan. 10 as the first broadcast] sponsored by Detroit Creamery. The first episode mentioned in Detroit newspapers was that of February 2 in which "The Hornet sets things straight when a reputable representative of a crooked political ring is murdered and his nearest friend becomes defense attorney." For the first two, episodes, the hero was just the Hornet. When Meurer advised that they would be unable to obtain a copyright on that name alone, a color prefix was added. Before green was decided upon, they had also considered orange, purple, blue and pink [could anyone have loved a hero called the Pink Hornet?].

The show had five main characters. Britt Reid, the crime-fighting publisher, was played successively by Cleveland actor Al Hodge (1936-43) who later played Captain Video; A. Donavon Faust (1943) now in radio management; Robert Hall (1943-46); and Jack McCarthy (1946-52). His faithful valet of varying national origin was Kato, played by Tokutaro Hayashi [later changed to Raymond Toyo] who had the good fortune to be the only Japanese actor in town when the show was cast (he was there making a movie). Kato was later played by Rollon Parker and Michael Tolan. Reid's secretary, "Casey," was played by Detroiter Lenore Allman. Mike Axford, originally Reid's bodyguard and then a Sentinel reporter, was played by Jim Irwin and later by Gilly O'Shea, a former vaudevillian. Ace newsman Ed Lowrey was portrayed by Julien "Jack" Petruzzi. They were supported by the large staff of WXYZ players who also appeared in The Lone Ranger, Sergeant Preston, etc.

Although admittedly the favorite of Trendle and his staff, the Hornet never quite achieved the popularity of his predecessor-The Lone Ranger. Later, this was admitted to be due to neglect on the part of the staff since many were already in the highest income tax bracket. Thus, the Green Hornet was never closely identified nationally with a particular product. It went on MBS on April 12, 1938 and was on one of the networks almost continuously until 1950 and returned briefly in 1952. It is still available in syndication. Sponsorship was usually on a regional or local basis.

Supplements will be issued as information becomes available.

For those interested in old radio shows, the following publications are recommended: HELLO AGAIN, Jay Hickerson ed., 6 Koczak Ct., North Haven, Conn. 06473 [$3.50 yr.]; ECHOES OF THE PAST (including GOLDEN RADIO JOURNAL), Don Pellow and Roy Bright eds. respectively [distributed free-postage donations strongly recommended] 705 E. Chandler Ave., Evansville, Ind. 47713; RADIO NOSTALGIA, Virgil James ed., Box 8007 Union City, N.J. 07087 [write for details]; and REMEMBER WHEN, Larry Herndon ed., 1830 Highland Dr., Carrollton, Texas 75006 [4 issues-$2.50].

The following information was obtained mainly from the U.S. Catalogue of Copyright Entries, The Detroit Free Press, The Detroit News, The Chicago Tribune, and The New York Times. Dates 1947 and after are published copyright dates. Those prior to 1947 are dates and times of broadcast at Station WXYZ. Times occasionally varied on broadcast date but time given was that most consistent for the period. It is noted that there was significant variation in broadcast dates and times around the country, particularly in the earlier years. Program numbers are taken from published copyright data. There are occasional duplications in program numbers and broadcast dates as indicated by an asterisk (*). The reason for this could not be ascertained. The script author(s) name(s) follow the title and are indicated by the following code:
